Dear [redacted]

First, let me say that I thoroughly enjoyed my recent visit to London and I wish to thank you as well as the other members of the staff for your courtesy in making my stay a most pleasant one.

[redacted] have returned to Washington. In my discussion with [redacted] there was some rather vague and unofficial mention made of your finances. [redacted] seemed to think that they might not be in order at the moment. You will recall our conversation prior to your departure for duty in London. I tried to impress upon you at that time that personnel working for us in overseas installations must conduct themselves in such a manner as to be a credit to our organization as well as to the U. S. Government. Of course, you know that if your finances are not in order it is possible that it might reflect adversely upon us. For a single girl you are making a fine salary and I really do not see how there could be any question about having enough money to make all the ends meet. Please be assured that there has been no official mention made of this matter, but I feel obligated to write to you about it. If there is any merit to the statement that your finances may not be in order, I know that I can count on you to put them in order with the least possible delay.

Please give my regards to everyone at Caversham, and I should be pleased to hear from you when you find the time.

Sincerely,

L. K. White
